

Interpreting Third Party Audit Reports

what's it all about?

Many companies accept BRC certification as a means of compliance and will use it either partially or fully as the means of supplier approval. A completed BRC report can be typically about 70 pages long and reviewing one can be a daunting process if you are not familiar with the Standard. This course is intended to help those responsible for supplier approval and control to understand the requirements of the BRC Global Standard for Food Safety and interpret report findings so that they can confidently assess the ability of BRC certified companies to meet their needs and expectations as a supplier. The course will explain the level of detail that the BRC expects to see in reports so that delegates can judge whether or not a report answers their needs.
